One online marketing tactic you should know about is guest writing, something that is really not used very much. When you write guest posts for blogs that are in your niche, you not only showcase your expertise but also build traffic to your site. The way to go about this is easy; all you need do is find popular blogs in your niche market (this means blogs that have good traffic, but not necessarily a big name). So your target should be high traffic blogs, which aren't known too well. Contact some of these blog owners by email and offer to send them free articles. Along with this, tell them that you will create a number of links to their blog. You'll want to promote any posts or articles they decide to use. It's essential, of course, to write a brief bio that includes a link back to your site.

Another powerful tactic to drive traffic to your website and get more exposure is to write and give away free viral reports/ebooks. This technique has the potential to "go viral," which can really boost your traffic.

What you can have happen is that someone will read your ebook and like it enough to send it along to their friend, who will in turn pass it on again, and so on. What you have to do here is write some good, useful content and not just try to sell something in the ebook. People don't want to send spam to their friends, but if your ebook is good and helpful, they'll want to pass it on. You can have a few affiliate links in the ebook, but don't forget to include your site's link in the footer, so it shows up on every page.

In conclusion, Internet marketing is a medium that can prove to be highly profitable, if you use it the right way. If you want to see long term success with your internet marketing efforts, always keep your business practices ethical. 9 to 5 Annihilation
